Annual statistical data on population (demography) are fundamental for the study and determination of a wide range of analyses. They constitute the essential component for the assessment of national accounts, employment and other socio-economic issues.

The estimate of the population number is a necessity, practice and standard that is required to be conducted every year by the official statistical institutions of a country. This is due to the fact that in the period between two population censuses (ten-year period) significant changes occur in the population of a country.
